

ABSTRACT

Methods for detecting the presence of foreign DNA in the DNA of a host organism are described. Probe libraries prepared from modified DNA, and from unmodified DNA, are competitively hybridized with reference DNA sequences cloned on solid phase
5 supports, where the reference DNA sequences are characteristic of the foreign DNA. Probes containing the foreign DNA can thereby be isolated and/or identified.